

Please,

I was taught that the basic foundation of the free-market, capitalist economy was that consumers – not suppliers – determined success in the marketplace.

Proposed changes removing net-neutrality protections contradict that simple fundamental and so have no economic good for the whole of the American population.

From a social responsibility, not economic responsibility perspective, how much more control of US life needs be given over to big business before it is finally too much?

Do not repeal net-neutrality protections now in place.

Respectfully, and hopefully,

s/ Robert M. Olsen, simply a US citizen